Approach

Silas looks for businesses and teams with a clear, defensible reason to exist, not a story that only works in a pitch deck. Before any capital moves, the questions are practical: what problem is being solved, why this team is positioned to solve it, and what has to be true for the business to hold up over a full cycle, not just the next round.

Long-term view

The horizon is long by design: Future Power Capital is built to hold positions through the work of building a company, a portfolio, or a project, rather than to trade in and out of them.
