SERVICES — DEEP TECH PROGRAMME

For science too early for venture capital, and too slow for a grant cycle

The Deep Tech Programme is a long-horizon initiative we are building to fund and support hard-science and engineering-led teams — the kind of work that changes what's possible, but doesn't fit the usual funding timelines. This document sets out what the programme will do, why it matters, and how it will work.

Who the programme will look for

- A genuine scientific or engineering foundation. Teams whose core advantage is technical depth, not a business model wrapped around an existing technology.
- A problem worth the timeline. Work that is genuinely hard to fund elsewhere because of its horizon or capital intensity.
- Founders who can go the distance. A team able to articulate the science honestly, including what remains unproven.
- A verifiable legal entity. The applicant must be a properly incorporated organisation we can assess and contract with.

Why this programme exists

Hard-science and engineering-led work often falls into a gap: too early-stage or capital-intensive for conventional venture capital, and too commercially framed for the typical grant cycle. The Deep Tech Programme is built to sit in that gap.

The Deep Tech Programme is a long-horizon initiative under active development. This document describes its intended scope and approach; it does not represent a current fund open for applications beyond our stated process.
